

Scenario 1

You have a resident who continually comes to your door at 2pm each day. They just want to “hang out.” How would you deal with the situation in a healthy manner?

Scenario 2

It is midterm week. Paper assignments are piling up, you’re scheduled for duty in the evening, and you have not seen your friends in days. A fellow RA asks for help creating the “Roommate Date” flyer in the same afternoon. What should you do?

Scenario 3

Jenny, Melissa, and Jeremy did such a good job during the Boundaries training that your boundaries are too rigid. A fellow RA asks for help pulling off a community builder. You tell them to take a hike! Your RD has been waiting for incident reports to be filed, but that cuts into your “quiet time.” In the name of “boundaries” you have been too guarded. What do you do?

Scenario 4

It is the first week of school and you are in the midst of your all living area meeting. You decide that in the spirit of authenticity you will share about your past failures in relationships. What is appropriate to share in this setting?

Scenario 5

You have been diligently living your busy life. RA responsibilities, church work, maintaining a high GPA, and relationships are all doing well. However, in the midst of all the chaos you are beginning to get sick and are becoming easily agitated. What should you do?
